UTAH STATE REALLY ROCKS

NEW film 127 Hours tells the desperate story of a climber who is forced to cut off his own arm when he becomes trapped under a boulder in a remote canyon.

Despite the grim storyline the US scenery provides an amazing backdrop. The movie, starring James Franco, right, as real-life adventurer Aron Ralston, is set in Utah's Blue John Canyon.

Now YOU can check out the state's remarkable rock formations with an 11-night fly-drive break. The trip costs £1,275 per person, inclusive of flights from Heathrow, Manchester or Glasgow, 11 nights in mainly four-star hotels and lodges, a compact-sized hire car for 12 days, and a 100-page travel guide with full driving instructions, area information and points of interest en route.

STAY

You can travel any time between April and October. Highlights include the stunning Zion, Canyonlands and Arches national parks.
